

從桌上的泰德陳

e-MAIL: [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

August 30, 2013

[REDACTED]

My name is Yang Chengli, I am a contacting you in relations to late William Morris. I worked for him as his private investment manager, and in the few years prior to his death invested substantially in various opportunities with total value of US$17.5m.

After a few years of profit making, he instructed that all the money be collected together into a single bank account, and I arranged with a specialist bank here in China to secure the money in a single account, shortly after he died, I assumed his relatives has since made claims, only to get a phone call from the bank a few weeks ago that William funds remains unclaimed, and the money would go to the Government if nobody claims it.

The bank used international people finders to locate any relative of William but they failed to locate any, hence I have taken the initiative to make enquires myself, in the process I have been provided your details, I propose that we don't allow this money go to the Government and work together to legally secure this money in full compliance with the laws of China.

If you do wish to participate in this deal, I propose we share this money 50-50, and you don't have to have know him, you already have a huge advantage as you share exact same last name, ("Morris") and I can give you absolute assurance that everything would be done legally as I have a local solicitor working with me at this deal, she would guarantee full compliance of the law during this process. Kindly keep this communication confidential due to its sensitivity as we do not want this inheritance to fall in the wrong hands, let me know as soon as possible if you wish to participate in this deal.

Yang Chengli.